AZM Gives You One More Reason Why Your Next Roof Should Be Made of Metal...

Who doesn't want metal roofing that lasts longer?

Everlast Roofing Inc. has raised the bar when it comes to the durability of metal roofing by introducing AZM brand roofing with Activate Technology. This product is a highly corrosion-resistant coated steel known as Zincalume which is then treated with the Activate Technology.

And what does this all mean?

It means you now have access to metal roofing that is more corrosive resistant than previous generations of metal roofing- Especially at the cut edge!

To see this new roofing simply stop by Eastern States Metal Roofing at 7820 Route 474 in Panama, NY or call 716-355-4374.

Both of these test panels were exposed to very harsh, salt-water conditions on the coast of Australia. The left panel is an example of AZM brand metal roofing. The right panel is standard galvalume... As you can see corrosion is rapidly creeping in on each corner of the galvalume panel.

What parents should know about ultraprocessed foods

Parents of young children know that a day doesn't go by when they don't spend some portion of the day thinking about their youngster's health. Whether it's getting kids to bed on time so they can reap the rewards of sufficient sleep or taking steps to protect children's mental health or encouraging kids to be physically active, parents make various daily decisions with their youngsters' health in mind.

Parents choices regarding kids' diets are equally important and consequential decisions. Ultraprocessed foods have garnered increased attention in recent years, and curious parents can consider this rundown as they seek to make healthy dietary choices for their children.

Defining ultraprocessed foods

The National Academy of Medicine notes that the term "ultraprocessed foods" is typically defined as any food containing an ingredient not typically found in a home kitchen or restaurant. Ingredients such as high fructose corn syrup fit that description.

The concern surrounding ultraprocessed foods

Much of the concern about ultraprocessed foods is not necessarily the items themselves but the frequency with which they tend to be eaten. Consuming the occasional food containing high fructose corn syrup likely won't have a significant impact on a person's overall health if that individual is consuming sufficient amounts of fiber-rich fruits, vegetables and whole grains as well. But the NAM notes that ultraprocessed foods are engineered to feature an almost irresistible flavor profile, which makes it difficult for anyone, but especially children, who have limited impulse control, to avoid overconsumption. Therein lies the danger of ultraprocessed foods, which tend to contain higher amounts of sugar, salt and saturated fat than whole foods or minimally processed items. Adults may recognize when it's time to stop eating less nutritious foods, regardless of how appealing they might be. But children are unlikely to stop eating something if it tastes good, regardless of its questionable nutritional profile. Kids who grow accustomed to eating large amounts of ultraprocessed foods could be in jeopardy of developing conditions such as obesity or heart disease that are linked to overconsumption of sugar, salt and saturated fat.

Examples of ultraprocessed foods

The World Health Organization notes that sugary snacks, including candy and baked goods, and sugar-sweetened beverages like soda, are some popular examples of ultraprocessed foods. Potato chips and some commercially produced breads, including white bread sold at supermarkets, are some additional examples of ultraprocessed foods.

Parents concerned about the effects of ultraprocessed foods on their children's health are urged to discuss alternatives with a pediatrician. Children old enough to understand the benefits of a nutritious diet can be included in such discussions so they gain a greater understanding of the dangers of excessive consumption of ultraprocessed foods.
